Mr. Genscher said that when he met Mr. Gromyko and the late Soviet president, Leonid I. Brezhnev, in Moscow in 1980, "They shared our view that the British and French weapons are strategic," that is, designed for national defense and not for the general defense of Western France. Western Europe.

But the current Soviet leader, Yuri V. Andropov, has insisted that the British and French weapons should be included in the European equation of intermediate-range weapons and that the Soviet Union should be allowed 162 warheads to offset them. This has proved the main obstacle at the Geneva talks. Mr. Genscher said Mr. Gromyko

A change in the Soviet Union's position would "clear the way to an agreement," Mr. Genscher said.

Soviet Calls Jet Downing 'No Accident'

Military Chief Says Officer Decided to Fire Because Plane Was Spying

By John F. Burns New York Times Service

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union's top ranking military offi-cer, Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, said Friday that it was "not an accident or an error" when a Soviet fighter shot down a Korean Air Lines Boeing 747 jetliner over the Sea of Japan.

Marshal Ogarkov, chief of the eneral staff of the Soviet armed forces, said at a news conference that the decision "to stop the flight" of the airliner was taken by a district commander of the Air Defense Forces when he and other local officers had concluded that the aircraft was on a spying mission over top-secret military bases.

Marshal Ogarkov's appearance came before a packed auditorium in the Foreign Ministry Press Cen-ter. For two hours, Western and Soviet reporters questioned the marsbal and two other senior officials in what was one of the very few occasions since World War II that the country's top-ranking offi-

The marshal gave the ome of the "termination" of the flight by the fighter as 6:24 A.M. local time. He said the jet had "continued its flight, lowering its level, until it finally disappeared" from radar screens into the Sea of Japan. He said that the Soviet Union had been unable to "pinpoint" the site of the crash into the sea, but was mounting a major air and sea search for debris.

Marshal Ogarkov and the officials who appeared with him expressed regret at the loss of life, but they vigorously upheld the correctness of the action.

Marshal Ogarkov said the Soviet authorities "do oot consider" the to have been a commercial flight because of a pattern of behavior in the preceding two and a half bours that established beyond

United Press International WASHINGTON -- President Ronald Reagan, still highly concerned with the shooting down of a South Korean jet-liner by the Soviet Union, will address the UN General As-sembly in New York on Sept. 26, a White House spokesman announced Friday.

The president believes that the overall world situation requires a statement at the highest level," said Larry M. Speakes, Mr. Reagan's deputy press sec-retary. Mr. Reagan last ap-peared before the United Nations on June 17, 1982, at the Conference on Disarmament.

Mr. Speakes said that Mr. Reagan would discuss a "range of subjects," including the air-liner incident, and would meet with Secretary-General Javier Pèrez de Cuellar.

"We hope and trust that this will be given the support of the Soviet Union at the Montreal meeting," Mr. Genscher said, "and I told Gromyko as much." He met Thurs-day with Andrei A. Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister.

Mr. Genscher said the boycott "is meant as a political demonstration, not a sanction."

The NATO governments also will support South Korea's de-mands for an explanation, for com-pensation for the victims of the attack and for punishment of those who carried it out, Mr. Genscher

Gromyko Discusses Jet With French

Compiled by Our Staff From Duspatch PARIS - The Soviet foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, offered "long explanations" Friday of last week's shooting down of a South Korean airliner, in a twohour meeting with President François Mitterrand, a presidential spokesman said.

The spokesman, Michel Vauzelle, also said Mr. Mitterrand told Mr. Gromyko in "language with-out any concessions" of France's anger at the destruction of the Boeing 747 with 269 aboard.

Mr. Marchais was speaking Thursday, at the opening of a hu-man rights exhibition at the Fête de l'Humanité, an annual festival sponsored by the Communist Party newspaper l'Humanité.

Norway Will Vote in Local Elections

OSLO (AP) — A local election campaign fought mainly on national economic issues ended Friday night as Norwegians prepared to vote for members of 19 county and 450 municipal councils. Voting is scheduled Sunday and Monday, with most voting taking place the second day. On a national basis, experts were predicting only minor changes in party strength from a national election two years ago.

Opinion polls predict some losses for the three partners of Prime Minister Kare Willoch's coalition government - his own Conservative party, the Christian People's party and the Agrarian Center party. The opposition Labor Party, which lost power in 1981, could make marginal

2 Nigeria States to Hold Delayed Vote LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — The Nigerian states of Oyo and Ondo, wracked by election violence last month that claimed at least 43 lives, will begin their final rounds of balloting Wednesday, the Federal Electoral Commission announced Friday.

The commission ordered an indefinite postponement of elections in the two states following the trouble. The chairman of the commission, Justice Victor Ovie-Whiskey, said he hopes the governors of Oyo and Ondo will appeal to their people to keep the peace this time. The violence crupted after governors in the two states, which had been strongholds of the Unity Party, were ousted by candidates from the dominant National Party of Nigeria. The results are now being contested in court.

Five weekly rounds of elections in the other 17 states ended last Saturday. The National Party scored sweeping victories over five opposition parties in all the elections and its leader, President Sheho Shagari, was returned to a second four-year term by more than four million votes.

Agency in U.S. Tentatively Approves Smoking Ban on Short-Range Flights

WASHINGTON — A ban on smoking on short airline flights has been tentatively approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board and could be in effect by year's end, the board has announced.

The agency voted 4 to 0 Wednesday in favor of a proposed rule that would forbid smoking on commercial flights lasting an hour or less, a spokesman, Wallace Stefany, said Thursday. The board left open the option of extending the ban to two-hoor flights if such a measure won enough backing.

The decision will depend on the consensus of comments the Civil Aeronautics Board, a federal agency, will solicit when it advertises the proposed rule change in the Federal Register, probably within the next two weeks, Mr. Stefany said.

Interested parties would be allowed 45 days for formal written comments. Another 20 days would be set aside for written responses, with additional time to be allowed for oral arguments after all briefs are filed. Under this schedule, action on a final rule can be expected by late

Peter G. Peterson, former commerce secretary, who an-nounced in July that he was leaving Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb, is going into business with Eli S. Jacobs, a venture capitalist who is edging into the business and political spotlight.

The two men are forming a private company that will manage their own assets, invest in new companies and overhaul ailing ones.

Mr. Jacobs, 45, who was editor of the Yale Daily News as a student and is a graduate of Yale Law School, never practiced law or journalism professionally (aside from being a director of the Times Mirror Co. of Los Angeles). He was one of the youngest partners at bankers White Weld & Co. and took a year off to bead a redevelopment agency for Brook-lyn's Bedford Stuyvesant section. Later, he became chairman and, with $40 million invested, the largest stockholder of Bio Response Inc., an emerging biotechnology company. He is a member of President Ronald Reagan's advisory panel on arms control and disarmament and a close friend of Lewis Lehrman, who ran unsuccessfully last year for governor of New York.

Mr. Peterson, 57, son of Greek immigrants, became head of Bell & Howell at age 34 before serving in the Nixon administration. He left Lehman Brothers a year or so earlier than planned after Lewis L. Nantucket's most unusual visitor this summer is a rare African heron who inexplicably ndered 4,000 miles (6,500 kilometers) from its usual flyway to the Massachusetts island. The bird watchers peer at it through hinoculars and take its picture, and the "listers" check it on their list of sightings. A special "reef heron hot line" established by the Audubon Society says the bird is not a runaway from some nearby aviary because it is not on the international list of captive species. The bird is about the size of a duck with distinctive feet known as "yellow slippers." It normally stays in the tropical portions of coastal West Africa. Some say it crossed the Equator and was blown off course by a tropical storm. Some say it might have been a stowaway on Explaining the "reef heron madness," a Washington birder said: "We are, emphatically, not just a tiny band of elderly folks in tennis shoes. We are researchers, conservationists and listers. And when a oncein-a-lifetime bird appears, it is no surprise for the hard core to jump on a plane, then bicycle 20 miles, and travel another 50 by boat — all in just three hection days - to see it."

Indians and Citizens of Mixed Race Might Get Chambers; Blacks Wouldn't

The Associated Pres.

CAPE TOWN - After months of debate, the white parliament of South Africa endorsed Friday a new constitution creating legi tive chambers for the mixed race and Indian minorities.

The proposed constitution represents the first move away from exchisive white rule since the National Party took power 35 years ago. The measure must be approved in a referendum by white voters Nov. 2. The vote of 119-35 in favor of the constitution was assured since the Nationalists hold two-thirds of the 178 seats in the assembly.

The outcome of the referendum is less certain because of the threat of the combined opposition of white conservatives against any concessions and progressives who say the constitution entrenches

The eight members of the New Republic Party voted for change, calling the new constitution an important first step toward reform.

The Progressive Federal Party voted against it because the consti tution ignores the voteless black majority of nearly 21 million, who continue to be considered citizens of 10 tribal homelands. The party also said the new system was weighted in favor of whites and

Months of Earth Tremors Bring Hysteria to Naples Suburb

POZZUOLI, Italy - After almost 10 months of daily earth tremors, the 65,000 people of this town adjoining Naples are running away, camping out, being evacuat-ed or brooding about what they should do.

"In a population that has been under continuous stress for almost a year, there reigns a most understandable collective hysteria," said Captain Vittorio Tomasone, who as the Pozzuoli chief of the carabinieri, the national police force, is responsible for the town's safety. "When one night there are no tremors, they dream one up."

The people of this working-class town of run-down houses and garbage-littered streets, situated on the Gulf of Naples, have not dreamed their tremors lately. From November to about two weeks ago, they had occurred only periodical-

The Gothic Charm of Siena

VIGNON, France - The city

A of Siena was of no great consequence until the invading barbarians made the coastal road to Rome too hazardous for travelers. By the cighth century it had become the seat of a bishopric, and by the 12th century it was established as an important merchant town with a large finger in the Roman Curia and powerful moneylenders playing a role throughout Europe.

The 13th century brought the city to its zenith, with the rise and fall of the Buonsignon family. The Buonsignori were bankers who, among other things, handled papel nances and who are sometim ferred to as "the Rothschilds of the 13th century." They went bank-rupt in 1298 — an event that disipted the finances of the entire sify and marked the beginning of its downfall. Fifty years later, the plague killed off two-thirds of the population, and in 1555, the city, which had declined from 50,000 inhabitants in its heyday to 8,000, fell under Florentine domination. A charming exhibition of 127 items, "Sienese Gothic Art" at the Petit Palais, begins in the late 13th century and extends to the end of the following century. For Siena, even in its economic decline, continued to have an important artistic scrutiny the present show affords. The erudite catalog rather too hastily assumes that visitors will be familiar with the history of the pen-insula at this period and with the "imposing artistic movement" initiated by Frederick II - a movement whose impact was strengthened by a political and military presence. It is argued that the Tuscan renewal of the 13th century was a deviation of this particular movement, so that we are to see, as the original impetes behind all these works, the shadowy profile of

activity, which deserves the close

- The show includes illuminated manuscripts, paintings, sculptures and precious reliquaries, chalices and croziers. There is no doubt much that seems familiar in all this. because we are more struck by the points all Gothic art holds in common than by regional differences. But a certain number of works stand out with unusual force, and one of these is a manuscript of Dante's "Inferno" with two superbillustrations "attributed to Pietro Lorenzetti" and dated about 1340.

These two pages use the typical Gothic device of narrative figuration in which the same persons are shown simultaneously in different parts of the picture. Thus Dante is shown sleeping rising walking en-countering the bon, the panther and the wolf and recoiling in fear before them. In the following pichind the painted border, while Dante kneels before a patriarchal Virgil, pointing a fearful finger at the pursuing beast. The landscape is abstract and austere, but carries nonetheless a Tuscan flavor, and the two images deserve to become classics of art history.

There are some works by Simone Martini, who was to die in Avignon and whose frescoes for the Palace of the Popes were rediscovered and restored about 20 years ago (they are to be seen outside this exhibition, in the great hall of the Consistory), and a considerable number of the paintings present a relatively predictable treatment of religious least, to the chest decorators' guild, and the sweet and gilded style shows us the source of inspiration of the myriads of shoddy-precious boxes offered for the consumption of tourists in Tuscany today.

One delightful little painting, on loan from the Louvre, is Niccolò di Buonaccorso's "Virgin of Humility." The Virgin is seated on the floor, suckling her infant, in a neat and intimate little room. The square composition opens upward to include the heavens in a vaulting triangle, so that God the Father appears, surrounded by the cherubim, while the dove descends, wafted on the Father's breath.

An Illuminated page from a lost manuscript (on loan from the Fitzwilliam Museum in Cambridge) is attributed to Sassetta and dated about 1435. It is an admirably spare and yet colorful scene from the life of an unknown saint, who is shown simultaneously lying in her tomb, being raised to heaven by two blond angels and taking a nap in a crowded boat. There is an extraordinary freshness of tone and color here, the black boat on the green sea sailing towards a pink Avignon, to Oct. 2.

themes. A few decorated boxes and city under a deep golden sky and chests remind us that painters in bound into a single composition those days belonged, in Italy at with the holy woman's delicate marble tone by the colorful innocence of the painted border.

A nice insight into the mentality of the day is given by a series of five painted wooden tablets that were originally the covers to the annual report of the auditors of the city of Siena, a body known as La Biccherna. The tablets all show one or two men dutifully counting money, display the family shields of the four auditors of the year and carry an inscription to the effect that "This is the book of receipts and expenditures of the Biccherna of the city of Siena."

An abundance of preciously illuminated manuscripts and works of goldsmiths and silversmiths more precious still complete the show, while the catalog reminds us that a close tie existed in those days between all the arts, a silversmith's reliquary serving as a model for the dome of the cathedral while an illuminator of manuscripts, such as Master Giovanni, could take time out to direct work on the building of Siena's town hall.

Portrait Miniatures of the Tudor Period

By Max Wykes-Joyce International Herald Tribune

ONDON - As Jim Murrell, L deputy keeper of conservation at the Victoria and Albert Museum, pointed out in his introductory essay to "The English Miniature," (Yale University Press, 1982) "the painting of portrait miniatures in watercolor is a peculiarly English art form, for no other country supported a continous and flourishing school of artists working in this metier during a period of almost 400 years."

Murrell, together with the direc-tor of the Victoria and Albert, Sir Roy Strong, has now organized un-der the title "Artists of the Tudor Court," a major exhibition of the first 100 years of the English portrait miniature, from 1520-1620. Anyone tolerably interested in the subject is familiar with the great names of the medium -- Hans Holbein (1497-1543), Nicholas Hilliard (1547-1619) and Isaac Oliver (1560-1617).

The delight of this essay in rediscovery and historical research, nowever, is the plausible attribution of groups of miniatures to hitherto little-known, or entirely unknown arists — notably Lucas Hornebolte (c.1490/5-1544) son of the illuminator Gerard Horne- ny Eyton to stay there and make a bolte, and from 1531 to 1544 king's painter to Henry VIII; Levina Teerline (1510/20-1576) daughter of the Low Countries miniaturist Simon Benninck, and gentlewoman of the bedchamber to Mary 1 and the young Elizabeth I; and Rowland Lockey (c.1565-1616), one of Hilliard's most talented appren-

An auctioneer who leaves the profession is a bit like an officer who leaves the army --- be tears imself off from a caste. Michel Maignan, who operated at the Drouot auction house from 1969 to 1982, has just done this. In May, he opened his own gallery, Duvelleroy, at 25 Rue de Lille, inaugurating it with an exhibition called "Space Conquest Bicentennial." This was in reference to June 5, 1783, when Joseph Michel Montsolfier, who, with his brother Etienne, invented the hot air balloon, made his first successful ascent at Annonay, near Lyons. Less than two months elapsed before another Frenchman, Alexandre Charles, went up in a hydrogen-inflated contrivance that flew from the Champ de Mars in Paris to Gonesse, a few miles away. It all culminated on Dec. I, with the ascent of Charles and Louis Robert from the Tuileries Gardens.

To Parisians, this was at least as sensational as John Glenn's flight into space in the 20th century. Marie Antoinette watched it from the balcony at the Tuileries Palace, while an estimated 400,000 spectators, half the Paris populace, crowded the gardens, the Place Louis XV (now Place de la Concorde) and the countryside, which began nearby in those days.

From that moment, balloons became the rage. They invaded every aspect of daily life, and left their stamp nn every household item from costumes - of which hardly any survive -- to porcelain or fans. These are almost as rare as cos-tumes, for much the same reason, their fragility. In his exhibition, Michel Maignan displayed no less than 12 balloon fans, éventails d la montgolfière. For Maignan not only took up dealing, be decided he would spo cialize - in fans. Ratified as it may seem, the idea came naturally to Maignan, a direct descendant on his mother's side of the Duvelleroy who, in 1827, founded what became one of the most successful companies producing and selling fans in France. The enterprise was still going strong on the eve of World War II. Maignan, brought up in this fan-conscious family, amassed almost without thinking vast and generally inaccessible store of knowledge on the subject.

Extensive art historical information and a good deal of highly specific knowledge are a prerequi site. The aesthetic appeal is easy enough, but identification can be devilishly difficult.

Tucked away in a drawer is a charming piece with a scene that those familiar with Greek mythology as it was handled in post-Mannerist Italy would identify as "Paris and the Apple." The back is decorated with tulips on a black ground

There is no handbook on how to date or localize such a piece. Tulips, Maignan notes, are the first due. "Tulipomania," as the great fad for the newly developed flower was known, had died out by 1650. Black grounds, on the other hand, were popular in Louis XIII period tapestries. The fan may therefore be dated to about 1630-40 and safely attributed to France. It would be hard to find anything

An inventory of royal objects compiled at the request of Napoleon III mentions one belongng to Diane de Poitiers, another to Catherine de Médicis. Theater in China Emerges Carefully From the Maoist Era

By Christopher S. Wren

New York Times Service BEUING — The political message used to be the only medium in contemporary Chinese the-ater. During the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, ideologues even dictated the plots and sent playwrights to research the details firsthand among the masses, who enjoyed final script approval.

Those were the years when Ying Ruocheng and his fellow actors at Beijing's People's Art Theater were planting rice on the farm or making kites in the rehearsal halls for lack of anything more sensible to do.

Following the death of Chairman Mao and the jailing of his widow Jiang Qing, a former Shanghai actress who dominated the radical clique now castigated as the Gang of Four, Chinese theater has emerged from the shadow of the Cultural Revolution - though bardly from all political constraints. "A few years ago, we were talking about the remnant fear in the heart of the artists." Ying said. They felt afraid. I think that's mostly gone." Ying recently appeared as Ku-blai Khan in the mini-series "Marco Polo," co-produced by China, Italy, the United States and Japan, a supporting role that obscured his stature as one of China's foremost actors and directors. In Beijing. Ying is far better known as Willy Loman in a watershed production of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman." which has mesmerized packed audiences for more than room of the People's Art Theater. The backlash to that has been strong, too. People have made a of all. They theorized that all literpoint of declaring. I have no mes- ature and art followed that, even

You don't write a play unless you explain, but they were good at ignoring what didn't fit in with their

Still. Chinese theater remains beholden to the Communist Party. Dramatists are bound by duty to support socialist ethics by giving people positive, lasting encouragement through their artistic productions," Zhou Yang, a top cultural commissar, told playwrights in one pep talk last year. Yet the successful run of "The Death of a Salesman" testifies to a greater leeway given by the party and the ministry

In recent Chinese plays, there has been more realistic discussion of social problems. "If I Were Real," which dealt with privilege among the children of party functionaries, was restricted to select audiences when it premiered in 1979. There was no such caution in 1981 with "Who Is Stronger?" another play that depicted with candor a factory manager's battle against vested corruption.

The People's Art Theater has included two modernistic plays by Gao Xingjian, a writer influenced by Jean Genet and Samnel Beckett. His "Warning Signal," performed with a minimum of props by actors in street clothes, tells of an unemployed young man who encounters his fiancée on a train that he has set out to rob. In a sensual scene unthinkable a few years ago, the lovers caress each other to the strains of electronic music. In the same author's "Bus Stop," eight people bang around 10 years waiting for a bus that turns out to have been canceled, a metaphor perhaps for the wasted decade of the Cultural

Such plays are clearly a break with the san tuchu, or "three prominences" favored by the Maoists that positive characters must be tive ones and that the most heroic character must be most prominent sage. What they mean to say is, I Shakespeare," Ying sighed. "With have no message as a forerunner. Molière it was more difficult to Revolution.

Given the difficulties of direct expression. Chinese playwrights with something to say have tended to hide behind history to convey a modern truth. Not that obliqueness always guaranteed ideological acceptance. The Cultural Revolution was launched in 1966 after Mao construed "Hai Jui Dismissed From Office," an obscure Ming dynasty, tale dramatized by Wu Han, as an attack on himself.

The allegorical device survives. Bai Hua, a playwright, got in trouble a couple of years ago for his blunt filmscript, "Unrequited Love," in which an artist returning home from abroad is bounded to death by radicals while the party stands by. The film was shot but never released and Bai had to write a self-criticism.

Bai has rebounded with "The Shining Spear of the King of Wn and the Sword of the King of Yueh," an allegorical play about a king corrupted by power some 2,500 years ago. The play enjoyed a safe run last season in Beijing because everyone took it as an attack on the megalomamacal rule of Mao. But Ying said that he wanted to see contemporary drama move beyond what he termed "this literature of conspiracy and historiography of insinuation."

A catalyst for experimentation have been the latest translations of Western plays denied the Chinese for so many years. Ymg observed that hua ju, or modern dialogue plays as contrasted with classical drama, also evolved in the early 20th century with translations of Shaw, Chekhov and Ibsen. A prominent hit of 1981 was aire for Measure," which featured Ying. Other translations of Shakespeare have included "Macbeth." "The Merchant of Venice," and now an operatic version of "Othello," complete with Chinese cymbals. Last year, the People's Ying said. Art Theater also staged "The

it," by the Swiss dramatist Friedrich Dürrenman. But "Death of a their faces," Ying said, though he which Miller directed, has made the biggest impact. Ying, who translated "Death of a Salesman" into the Beijing dialect of the 1940s, noted that "Death of a Salesman" contradicted the Chinese notion of a protagonist. "Willy Loman does everything that a self-respecting revolutionary cadre would not do. He brags, lies, has affairs with women, raises children in the wrong way and finally kills

Yet Willy Loman was a refreshing change. "After so many years of Jiang Qing, people are pro-grammed," Ying said. "When they see the main character, they expect him to be a goody-goody. This man does everything wrong and you still end up loving him." Miller's flashbacks that conveyed Willy Loman through time and space were also novel. Classical Chinese drama likewise ignored physical constraints and offered ghosts. But modern Chinese theater which emerged in the early 20th century developed as a protest against fiddling with life's dimen-The People's Art Theater, which was founded 31 years ago, has been on the cutting edge of such change — buttressed by the pressige of such prominent theatrical figures as the Shanghai playwright Cao Yu. Like other theaters in China, it is cushioned with hefty government subsidies. "The great advantage of a permanent company like ours is that you really get to know each other. Each company, after years of working together, evolves its own style," Ying said.

Overstaffing, which plagues al-most every Chinese enterprise, has caused desperation among those who lost the salad years of their careers to the Cultural Revolution. "If an actor is not given a part for three productions in succession, he feels he has the right to complain."

Some older actors in the compa-Butcher," a West German play ny were reluctant to yield up their about the Hitler era, and "The Vis-roles to younger talent. "Some of our ingenues have wrinkles all over a cultural event, in the sense that it added that the situation was improving.

How far reform in the Chinese theater can go remains unclear. Perhaps as a result of the recent changes, party ideologists have lately expressed alarm about creeping commercialism.

A seasoned actor earns an equivalent of about $75 a month. But some artists, particularly comedians who perform a popular dialogue form called "cross talk," have slipped off to the provinces, rented a theater, put on their own show and pocketed up to $2,500 a week. Ying knew such actors. They don't pay taxes. They don't even tell their group."

But Ying thought that the commercial side of theater should not be ignored. "We should make sure shows are attractive. There should be more diversity because of habits and age groups. Some conserva-tives will call anything they don't like commercial. But that's hopeless, because people want to be entestained "

With the precedent established, Ying hoped to see more Western plays in China. A young director he said. "Every production should be ambience for the talent to emerge."

opens up new possibilities and gives people ideas about the next tage of development.

Chinese playwrights also needed the prestige of the theater to help their careers, Ying said. "In the next few years, I'll try to find the right writers and themes and do some directing. It's not like doing Shakespeare or Arthur Miller. You have to start from the very beginning. They may have a good story and beautiful characters, but they need help.

Ying hoped that the Chinese the ater was outgrowing the need for sloganeering. In some cases, we have cast it off. In others, not so much. When a play has a political message not agreeable to everyone, we're in trouble because criticism in China is still political criticism Otherwise, we're not bothered."

Whatever the future holds, Ying does not expect China to revert to the years of ideologically straitlaced theater. "I feel we're in for a period of stability, with no political movements, upheavals, struggles or conflicts, which tend to make life very tense no matter which side you're on. If that lasts for any appreciable time, we will have more knew was thinking of staging artistic theater. There's never a lack "Amadeus." "But we shouldn't go of talent in China. It's whether you after the second-rate stuff." Ying have the right atmosphere, the right capacities are being eroded. The accusation holds that world trade does more than substitute jobs in an efficient plant for those in an inefficient one. Instead, it argues, current trade patterns are inflicting large losses in manufacturing inbs on the American economy and, beyond that, losses in the ability to manofacture. Further, these losses are being aggravated by the policies that other countries -- meaning Japan — to promote their products.

That is the indictment. Does a rigorous examination of actual experience bear it out? In one word, no. The economist Robert Z. Lawrence, writing in the current issue of the Brookings Papers, carefully reviews the evidence and comes to several conclusions that deserve the attention of all the people now warming up for next year's election. In the crucial period of rapid change that began with the 1973 oil crisis and ended with the 1980 recession, the oumber of jobs in manofactur-ing rose slightly in the United States. It would have fallen but for the net gains in industrial jobs created by foreign trade.

The United States has not lost its comparative advantage in manufacturing; to the contrary. It has lost ground in certain industries -

American anxieties about imports arise those that are labor-intensive, capital-inten-from a feeling that U.S. basic manufacturing sive and dependent on well-known technolsive and dependent on well-known technologies. Bot, Mr. Lawrence finds, in the 1970s Americans developed capacities in high-techoology sectors that more than compensated for the losses in older and simpler products.

There is a lot of pain and tension, unfortunately, in this process of shifting advantages and resources from familiar industries to the new ones. The degree of social distress has created an illusion of a general industrial decline. But it is an illusion, so far.

Since 1980, the pattern has changed. There have been two recessions, and the dollar's exchange rate has soared. That has made all American exports less competitive abroad because their prices have risen. With normal growth and a lower dollar, Mr. Lawrence concludes, manufacturing employment will recover with the rest of the economy.

But while he does not get into the subject, there is also a less optimistic corollary to that conclusion. If the dollar's exchange rate stays very high for a long time—a period of years—the damage to export industries could well be more than temporary. High interest rates are holding the dollar up. That is another reason why it is important to get rates down.

The Female Soldier

There is something about the U.S. Army's and plumber. The timing may be coincidental attitude toward female soldiers that could lead a cynie to suspect it would not weep if they all up and left. Uotil 1977, when the Carter administration declared women eligible for all concombat occupational specialties, there were not enough female soldiers to irritate apologists for "this man's army." Yet three years later the army, responding to congressionai demands, had to order commanders to deal "swiftly and fairly" with sexual harassment.

That the women's dropout rate was higher than men's was ascribed to such harassment, to the male soldier's inability to accept women in untraditional jobs and to the strain of working under hostile scrutiny.

The response? To reduce the places where harassment, heckling and hostility could occur. Females are oow denied access to 69 percent of all army jobs.

Some of the eliminated specialties may indeed be too arduous for most women (and some men). But all of the 23 categories forbidden last year were described as "closed due to exposure to direct combat policy" --- a policy that has tended to shrink and stretch with the times. And now, when male recruitment has met with special success, the army has further Now let Mr. Weinberger put it in writing. reduced the list to exclude jobs like electrician Still, female soldiers are understandably upset. Mary Evelyn Blagg Huey, the head of the Defense Advisory Committee ou Women in the Services, recently wrote to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger saying: "The closing of military occupations impacts negatively on career development for women, making their advancement difficult if not impossible. This 'domino effect' poses concerns for morale.

Mr. Weinberger, describing the situation to President Reagan during a meeting, was overheard to say "All the criticism was that we are closing off too many jobs that were associated with combat. And so what we've done is say that until there is an actual imminence of war, there will be women grease monkeys, if they want to, and things like that."

Not an elegant statement, but it is a start. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

Where are the Moralists

It is indeed surprising that not a single advocate of international law and morality has so far demanded Moscow's arraignment on - charges of wanton murder and inhumanity before the International Court at the Hagne.

There is also a plethora of peace councils around the world, many of them sandwiched between communism and capitalism, which have throughout the current hae and cry remained surprisingly silent.

- The Standard (Nairobi).

If we wait for the world to agree on showing Moscow what civilized people think of their behavior, we will wait forever. The whirr of commercial calculation drowns out the cries of indignation. Japan, a major victim of the Korean airliner massacre, doesn't want to upset Soviet Russia. That other one-time fearsome nation, West Germany, is equally timid. The Swiss don't want to know. Sir Geoffrey Howe, our [British] foreign secretary, is equally non-committal, pointing out that economic sanc-tions have very little impact. There is always a price to be paid for doing the right thing. It may be paid in rouhles, or sterling or dollars. But for betraying the dead on Flight KAL 007 there is only one appropriate payment. Thirty pieces of silver.

U.S. War Powers Act

American Marines in Lebanon are now in a situation "where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances." The words quoted are taken directly from the War Powers Act, a post-Vietnam statute in which Congress claims a role in the dispatch of U.S. forces to areas of conflict or potential conflict abroad.

If President Reagan should invoke this law — and so far he has refused to do so — U.S. forces could remain in Lebanon for only 60 or an unending Soviet buildup. 90 more days unless Congress authorizes their continued presence. Although there is some doubt that Congress would muster the will to hang tough in Lebanon, especially if the Marines take more casualties, the law is the law. Even though we share Reagan's doubts about the wisdom of the War Powers Act, we believe it is time for it to be brought into play.

A Chance in Geneva

After mooths of summer doldrums - punctuated by the stunning surprise of a major crisis that neither the United States nor the Soviets foresaw or wanted — the serious work of managing the superpower relationship re-sumed Tuesday at Geneva.

The clock on the Euromissile phase of arms control is running out. Unless a bargain is struck within a few weeks, the momentum for deploying two worrisome new generations of U.S. missiles — Pershing-2s and cruises — will be unstoppable. If they are deployed, the Soviets will respond in kind.

Ten days ago, Soviet leader Yuri Andropov announced a crucial change in the Soviet proposal. Mr. Andropov offered to "liquidate" the medium-range ouclear missiles which his government will remove from Enrope if there's a Euromissile agreement. Andropov's offer not only removes the main justification for the Pershing-cruise deploy-ment, but represents the first time either super-power has offered to dismantle part of a new, state-of-the-art weapons system. In that sense it has the look of a striking precedent. Yet the Reagan administration responded with the customary ho-hum, terming it a propaganda ploy aimed at the West Germans, a delaying tactic to retard U.S. deployment plans. The sole argument for installing the new U.S. missiles has been to "prove" that NATO has the "resolve" to carry forward with a 1979 decision now almost universally regarded as ill-advised, except as a last resort to dissuade

The MiG Attack and the MX Don't Mix

NEW YORK — Right-wing hawks are calling President Reagan, once one of their own, "pusillan-imous" (from the Latin pusillus, meaning "very small," and animus, meaning "soul") in his response to the destruction of Korean Air Lines

Flight 7 by a Soviet fighter plane. But if Mr. Reagan is successful in his calculated attempt to capitalize on this Soviet atrocity to win congressional approval for the MX missile will in fact be able to aim at the Soviet Union what its paranoically suspicious leaders are sure to regard as a first-strike weapon.

That is oot pusillanimous ("marked by contemptible timidity"); it is reckless to the point of nsibility.

Mr. Reagan not only cited the Korean airliner and its 269 lost passen-gers as a reason why the MX should be built; in his emotional TV address, he also invoked the name of the late Senator Henry Jackson, an MX proponent who died the day after Flight was shot down.
These tactics flow from the growing difficulty the president faces in forcing the unnecessary and destabilizing MX through the various stages of congressional approval.

Actually, there is no link whatever between the "termination" of Flight 7 and the supposed need for the MX. If anything, the gross Soviet deed over the Sea of Okhotsk reflects Soviet fear, suspicion, insecurity and distrust - oot the "aggression" Mr.

Reagan repeatedly cited. And Foreign Secretary Gromyko's stonewall remarks at Madrid, together with all the other Soviet bombast, sound much like "whistling past the graveyard" — desperate defiance, that is, of a world fearfully seen as threatening on all sides.

Against this paranoid leadership,

Mr. Reagan says it is now essential to pose the MX — 100 of them in the old Minuteman silos —as a deterrent to Moscow's bent for aggression. But the MX is likely to have just the opposite effect.

The Soviet leaders know that both the Carter and the Reagan administrations failed to devise an invulnerable basing plan for the giant, 10-warhead missile. They know that, therefore, its supposed justification - to give the United States an invulnerable land-based deterrent force has disappeared.

And they are altogether likely to draw the conclusion, plausible for such fearful and suspicious men, that the deployment of 100 MX missiles in the very silos ouce deemed vulnerable to Soviet attack means that the United States is planning to use them in a first strike.

(That, after all, is what the hardestline leaders of the Reagan Administration believe Moscow is planning to do with its heavy, multiple-warhead

If, therefore, the Soviet leaders are intrinsically as aggressive as Mr. Rea-gan claims the Flight 7 incident dem-

Why NATO Should Delay Deploying the Euromissiles

shing-2 medium-range nuclear missiles in West Germany. The Social Democratic Party continues to support NATO's 1979 "two-track" decision — to negotiate seriously with the Soviet Union in the hope of heading off installation of the missiles, but to deploy some medium-range missiles eventually if negotiations fail.

Yet we Social Democrats oppose U.S. and West German conservatives who are exploiting this decision in ways contrary to what was intended by NATO. Conservatives who consider it militarily essential to deploy Pershing-2 and cruise missiles assent to the arms control part of the twotrack decison only because they hope in this way to make deployment politically acceptable.

In contrast, we Social Democrats concede that deployment is one reac-tion to the Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Western Europe but still doubt whether land-based missiles in Europe and the proposed mix of Per-shing-2 and cruise missiles is militarily necessary. We also doubt that their deployment is politically sensible.

We originally supported the possi-bility of deployment mainly because we hoped to move the superpowers toward serious negotiations on medium-range missiles. At the time, in 1979, we also wanted to facilitate ratification of the second strategic arms limitations treaty and to demonstrate that the alliance was capable of acting together on nuclear issues. At the same time, however - and ever since --- we rejected any provision for "automatic" deployment of medium-range missiles.

Whether and how many of them should be deployed can be finally decided only when NATO as a whole and the German parliament in particular assess the outcome of the negotiations now taking place in Geneva. This was our policy in 1979 and it remains our policy today.

Several of the assumptions that underlay NATO's decision have changed since 1979. First, the decision was originally taken in a climate of detente. Now, however, the atmo-sphere has changed completely. Sec-ond, the Soviet Union has installed more SS-20's than NATO foresaw in 1979. Third, the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, whose ratification was then taken for granted, never passed the U.S. Senate.

Finally, the negotiations on medi-um-range missiles did not begin until the end of 1981, two years later than we originally hoped. This delay and High-Creativity the end of the year.

The Soviet Union has clearly surpassed NATO in the deployment of medium-range land-based missiles.

But I doubt that Moscow can such that the strength of the strength o cessfully use this advantage for politi-cal intimidation or hlackmail. Why not? First, strategic nuclear weapons still provide a certain deterrent effect against such regional ouclear threats. Second, it remains entirely unclear what practical political or military benefits can be derived from regional nuclear superiority.
Certainly, since World War II,

West German governments and the majority of West Germans have re-acted to Soviet attempts at intimidation and hlackmail not with compliance but with growing steadiness and loyalty to the Western Alliance. It is also clear that they will continue to do so, no matter which party is in power in Germany.

The Social Democratic Party now believes that the ideal solution would be a drastic reduction of Soviet SS-20's that would make it superfluous to deploy any new American medi-um-range missiles in Europe. The majority of our party would accept an agreement on the basis of the "walk in the woods" understanding taken last year by negotiators Paul Nitze and Yuli Kvitsinsky — a for-mula that would permit the deploy-ment of cruise but not Pershings and drastically limit the total oumber of warheads on both sides.

Our ultimate goal is to avoid the deployment of Pershing-2 missiles — and we remain critical of the American proposal now on the table in Geneva, which does not renounce their deployment. Why? First, because Pershing-2s are to be deployed only in West Germany - and it does us no good to single us out from the other NATO allies in Europe. Second, if NATO crosses this nuclear threshold, installing Pershings now to cover targets in Eastern Europe, it might pre-empt the possibility of eventually using missiles with con-ventional warheads to cover those targets. Deploying the Pershing-2 now would thus jeopardize future efforts to construct an effective conventional defense of Western Europe.

The writer, the West German Social Democratic Party's foreign policy spokesman in the Bundestag, or parliament, contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Death Permeates the Atmosphere in Washington By David S. Broder.

WASHINGTON—The members of Congress are returning to a capital strikingly different in atmosphere from the one they left at the start of their recess in early August. Death is in the air, and its sobering effects can be felt everywhere.

The summer ended with trip-hammer blows: the systematic shelling and killing of the U.S. Marines on "peacekeeping duty" in Lebanon; the murderous Soviet destruction of the Korean airliner, killing 269 persons, including Representative Larry Mc-Donald of Georgia; and the sudden, unexpected death of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

As is always the case, such tragedy has shamed the pettiness out of Washington politics. The atmosphere of soured partisanship Congress left behind when it took its August break has been transformed into a sense of shared concern and sobered realism.

President Reagan has been at his finest through this ordeal. Whether comforting the families of the slain Marines, expressing the nation's regrets at Scoop Jackson's death, or voicing the outrage everyone felt at the cold-blooded attack on the Korean airliner and its innocent passen-

What gave special poignancy to Mr. Reagan's impressive performance was that it so perfectly em-bodied the principles and even the personal style of Scoop Jackson, the man he mourned as "a true patriot." Mr. Jackson was the least theatrical of public men. His friend and colleague, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, once described Mr. Jackson as having "the charisma of competence." The Philadelphia Democrats who heard Moynihan use that phrase during the Pennsylvania primary of 1976 did not know what he meant; indeed, most of the voters in most of the primaries Mr. Jackson contested in his failed bids for the presidency in 1972 and 1976 never did quite catch on to the special character of the man they

He was right about that, just as history proved him right on other issues. Infallible he was not, but on most of the large questions to which he turned his ever-active intelligence, his judgment was awfully good. Most of all, he was realistic. He allowed himself few illusions, which made him especially valuable in a week like last week, when so many others found themselves disillusioned to the point of distraction.

"He lived in the worst of times," his friend Pat Moynihan said at last week's memorial service here, "the age of the totalitarian state. He wanted his country strong because he knew the terrible danger of the age in which we live. Where others lurch from one issue to another with the attention span of a five-year-old, he sustained this understanding and this vision through five of the most awful decades in the history of mankind."

Mr. Reagan was displaying those "Jacksonian" qualities last week—steadiness, strength and clarity—at a time when we needed them most.

ECONOMIC SCENE

U.S. Has Comparative Advantage In the High-Creativity' Industries

TEW YORK — Talk has it that the United States is losing ground in the race to develop the fast-growth, high-technology industries critical to economic success. But the evidence mustered by economists critical to economic success. But the evidence mustered by economists latest reporting week, the Federal tends to support the opposite thesis: that the United States has a Reserve Board reported Friday. longstanding comparative advantage in what ought to be called "high-creativity" industries.

These are industries such as medical diagnostic equipment, satellite communications, computer-aided industrial design, fiber optics, lasers and biotechnology that marry computers with something else. And they include computer hardware and software producers themselves.

U.S. trade figures show a large and generally growing surplus in manufactured products that are research-and-development intensive, and a deficit on the rest. Or look across countries, as

Robert Lawrence, an economist at the Brookings Institution, has done, at employment expansion in high-growth relative to low-growth manufacturing. The share of jobs in high-growth industry rose 8.9 percentage points in the United States, compared with 6.8 percentage points in Japan and 4.9 in West Germany, between 1973 and West Germany, between 1973 and 1979 (the latest data available).

Other indicators: The United States earns from abroad nine times what it pay for royalties and fees, and has more scientists and engineers per capits devoted to research and development than other country.

This advantage stems mainly from economic roots, and two special strengths stand out: First, to be successful in tomorrow's industries, you have to be good at managing creative professionals. Americans are. It means you need player-managers to direct creative units. They are people capable of giving substantive guidance, not just formal, control-oriented oversight.
You see it in sports, the movies and the arts: Bill Russell with the Celtics, Sylvester Stallone and "Rocky" and Bernstein conducting Bernstein.

Second, you need expert translators, people who can span the gap between the scientists, engineers and designers who are creating new products, and the outside world.

Fondness for Small Business Why should the United States be better than most countries in managing creative professionals? Here are a few observations:

• Americans like small businesses and respect people who run them. Even very large, ostensibly hierarchical high-creativity companies seek to stimulate a small-business attitude in new product units.

· Americans expect creative professionals to have fun, so enlightened managements set up buffers to protect creative people from dull bureaucrats who dislike change.

 Americans are team players. And creative professionals generally work best as a part of teams.

● Venture capital is there for bright ideas. Abroad, it is skimpy. Evidence: In 1982, 130 U.S. venture-capital companies had $2.6 billion of investments. Similar investments came to less than $300 million in Britain and Japan together, according to recent estimates. • The United States is a magnet for creative professionals from other countries, frustrated by outdated management styles. But well-managed professionals are not enough. That's why good translators are needed.

Educating Potential Customers

To begin with, they organize people to educate potential customers, often businessmen and women who may lack sufficient technical training to be informed buyers of high-creativity products and services.

since without adequate financing, creative shops break up. Finally, they communicate with government and regulators.

But even those who grant that the United States's comparative advantage is real are worried about two questions:

First, if other countries achieve some technological breakthroughs, can the United States lose that advantage quickly? Answer: Relax, copy and adapt. To be first is not necessary to be most profitable.

The second question is, how does this high-creativity advantage help in the slow-growth, smokestack industries? Answer: Retire slow learners. Then get new top management that will install the high-creativity products and services that will make the processes more productive. What's really needed are good listeners to absorb what the translators are

Increased 0.4% in August

WASHINGTON -- U.S. wholesale prices rose 0.4 percent last month as the effects of the summer's drought pushed up food prices for the first time in four months, the Labor Department reported Friday.

Prices for vegetables, poultry, eggs and pork all rose, largely as a result of the heat wave that has devastated some of the nation's crops, the Labor Department said. Food prices at the wholesale level rose 0.4 percent and will soon be reflected in prices of foods bought at the supermarket.
Food prices had fallen 0.6 percent in June and also in July. Consumers have already benefitted somewhat from the drought as the heat dried up feed used to fat-ten cattle and hogs and ranchers were forced to slaughter them, said Andrew Clem, a Labor Department economist.

However, consumers can now expect higher beef and pork prices in the coming months as these meats become more scarce, Mr.

Poultry will also become more expensive because chickens lost weight during the heat and others died, Mr. Clem said.

Vegetable prices at the consumer level have already begun to rise, Mr. Clem said because those foods "go directly from field to the grocery store." The vegetables most affected were potatoes, onions, lettuce and cabbage, Mr. Clem said.

The increase will probably produce a small rise in inflation, Mr.

U.S. Refuses to Pressure Banks on Latins' Debt must be taken to ensure that funds

By James L. Rowe Jr. Washington Post Service

CARACAS - The U.S. government would like to see lower interest rates for the Latin American nations that owe foreign lenders $300 billion, but will not "overtly wrestle" with the banks to get them to reduce their interest charges, ac-cording to Beryl W. Sprinkel, undersecretary for monetary affairs at the U.S. Treasury.

Mr. Sprinkel, heading the U.S. delegation to a special conference in Caracas on Latin American debt. said Thursday that the only way Latin America would get lower interest rates was if the banks began to believe that lending in the region was less risky than they now think it is.

Some Latin American nations have hoped that they could persuade U.S. officials at the conference to put pressure on the banks and the International Monetary Fund to go easier on them.

Instead, however, the conference will likely approve a mild statement recognizing the burdens faced by the debtor countries and saying that many of their problems are not of their own making and that steps ment is by force.

The document was approved Thursday — with some minor reservations from the United Statesby a group of lower-level government officials who sent it for approval to a ministerial session.

One top-ranking official said he believed that if the United States would continue to listen to Latin American nations, it would realize that the debt problem was more than a mere economic difficulty but has severe political implications. "Unless the U.S. helps more there could be much instability in Latin America," another highranking delegate said.

President Luis Herrera Campins of Venezuela, addressing the ministers Thursday, said commercial banks must take responsibility for helping debtor countries.

He obliquely raised the specter of a so-called debtors' cartel, saying that at some point the "weak" find that the only way to gain fair treat-

An open letter to Shirlstar Container Transport Ltd. from Trans Container Services AG.

Sir Benjamin Slade, Chairman Shirlstar Container Transport Ltd. 7 Swallow Street, London W1R 7HD.

OK, Sir Ben.

Trans Container Services AG accepts the challenge implied in the statement made by Tony Levene in the 4th September 1983 edition of the Sunday Times.

Naturally, we think our performance on behalf of our container owning clients is superior to that of any other container management company in Europe. Since you obviously do not feel the same way, an audited performance analysis is the only reasonable way to settle the main issues.

The basis of the competition is that an audit of several of the all important yardsticks of container leasing management by one or more auditing companies should take place immediately based on the results of the last fiscal year ending 31st March 1983. Both companies participating in the performance andit will choose their own auditors from the World's recognised "big eight" auditing firms. One point will be awarded to the company with the best performance for each item listed below. The company who is placed second will donate to a recognised charity of the winner's choice, £10,000.00.

The items to be measured are:

1. Overall utilisation performance for the twelve month period based upon the total containers available for leasing in the respective fleets (including those stored at factories) added to containers under repair in depots and divided by the total number of containers in the fleet.

2. The actual rentals (excluding the portion attributable to damage insurance) invoiced to shipping companies for the year in question, expressed as a percentage of the retail sales value (see paragraph 3 below) for all containers in

3. The average net return to container owners expressed as a percentage of the original retail purchase price paid to the management company. Containers which belong to the management company will be deemed to have the same retail value as those sold to investors and subject to the same charges. Only actual amounts collected from shipping companies, net of so called "in house guarantees" will be considered for this purpose after provisions for management fees, unrecoverable damages, wear and tear and refurbishments.

4. The Average number of days in which rental invoices to shipping companies remained outstanding from their date of invoicing to the shipping line."

5. The average contribution per container to owners by the management company for collected drop off charges, positioning revenue, lift on and lift off charges which are invoiced to shipping companies, (some companies fail to report this income to the investor).

uprated to 24 tons and qualify for CSC plating in preparation for the enforcement of the convention for safe containers and ratified by the members of the CSC Committee of the United Nations, expressed as a percentage of each fleet.

6. The number of containers in each fleet which have been

7. The ratios attributable to container leasing operations which typically measure financial strength, operating efficiency and liquidity of the company taken from the respective company's balance sheets and profit and loss statements adjusted for accounting policy differences.

8. A comparison of the internal management systems in effect at each company designed to motivate employees, control overall performance and ensure that no conflict of interest exists between containers owned by the management company and those owned by private investors.

Both companies participating in the performance audit agree to publish the results of the audit in at least two major national and two major international newspapers in addition to circularising all container owning clients of their respective companies within 30 days of the results becoming available. The costs of publishing to be borne equally by both companies.

Since the results of this competition, no doubt, are of paramount importance to our respective investors, TCS would be grateful to hear of your Company's acceptance or rejection of this challenge within the next ten days.

How about it, Sir Ben? Is it not the right time to reveal to investors what our respective companies have done for them, rather than what they have done for us? What could be more

Major Investment Banking Concerns Flock to Bid for Chrysler Warrants

DETROIT (UPI) - Virtually every major investment banking firm on Wall Street has joined one of three groups planning to bid for 14.4 million federally held warrants on Chrysler Corp. stock, it was reported Friday.

The warrants will be sold Monday to the highest bidder. The Detroit Free Press said Morgan Stanley & Co. is leading a group of eight firms and First Boston Corp. is heading up a second group of 10 companies. Goldman Sachs & Co. and Prudential Bache Securities have formed a third group.

Chrysler is still deciding whether to put in a bid. Robert S. Miller, executive vice president for finance, said the automaker will "keep watching things until the last minute." Each warrant holds the right to purchase one share of Chrysler stock at $13. The automaker's shares are now worth about $30.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission has approved the acquisition of French-owned FTC Communications Inc. by Tymshare Inc., bolstering Tymshare's efforts to enter the international communications market, and satisfying a commission requirement that FTC become a U.S.-owned company by Dec. 31, 1984.

According to the commission's order, Tymshare is acquiring 10,000 shares of stock in FTC for $5 million, and has also agreed to provide an immediate $5-million line of credit to the company. Yugoslavia, Western Banks Sign Agreement on Debt Restructuring

By John Tagliabue New York Times Service

BONN — Yugoslavia's about 600 Western creditor banks have agreed on a debt-restructoriog package that includes $600 million in fresh loans to help the nation's ailing economy.

The agreement, involving about $2 billion of credits, is the last block in a complex aid package assembled in recent months by commercial banks, international financial institutions and Western governments to insure that Yugoslavia can make repayment oo its foreign debt of $20 billion.

The agreement was signed Friday at the headquarters of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. in New York.

Under the agreement the banks will extend loans totaling a little more than $600 million to Yugoslavia this year. That would enable Yugoslav companies to purchase the raw materials and semifinished goods they need to make the products that bring in foreign exchange. In addition, the banks agreed to grant loans totaling $1.4 billion that Yugoslavia will use to repay the principal of previous loans owed the banks this year. The loans will be paid back over six years at an annual rate of 1% percentage points over the London interbank offered rate, the bank officials said. They said the banks had also agreed to keep open short-term trade-credit lines of $1.2 billion until the end of 1984. The new arrangement is expected to increase Yugoslavia's total foreign debt, including what it owes to governments, to about $20.5 billion, the bankers said. Yugoslav officials have estimated that servicing the nation's debt will cost about $5 billion this year.

The money involved in the current rescheduling package is owed to 550 to 600 banks scattered acrosss the Western world, though bank officials said that not all the

In August, Yugoslavia elminated a last burdle to the agreement by repaying $1.9 billion of the total that it owed Western creditors, including interest on all foreign loans as well as principal of loans whose repayment was not deferred.

Earlier this year, the Yugoslav government agreed to repay the loans, despite the fact that Yugoslav law releases the central government from responsibility for foreign debts incurred by businesses or the central banks of the nation's constituent republics.

Last year, the United States proposed to a number of Western nations a multibillioo-dollar loan package. The initiative came after Yugoslavia faced a severe cashflow problem that arose because Western banks were relucant to keep lending to it amid the general payments difficulties of several countries in the Soviet-dominated Eastern bloc.

the highest such ratio since 1978. Some analysts regard the ratio of borrowing to GNP as a good index of the level of overall credit demand. In the first quarter, the ratio was 14,1 percent. For all of 1982, it was 13.1 percent.

Almost all the large increase in credit demand, the Fed reported, came from individuals and state and local governments. Borrowing by these sectors rose at an annual rate of almost $96 billion, to a total annual rate of $250.4 billion.

Most analysts say the pressure oo interest rates will grow sharply only when nonfinancial corporations begin to demand substantial amounts of credit. The Fed's quarterly flow-of-funds estimates indicate that this may still be sometime in the future.

Two factors contribute to this conclusion. First, corporate cash flow is improving rapidly as the economy recovers, and, second, corporate spending oo new plant and equipment usually lags behind the pace of general business in a cyclical recovery.

The Fed's data show that internal funds generated by nonfinancial corporations in the second quarter - primarily from retained earnings and depreciation - came up from $240.5 billion for all 1982. in 1981.

TIKE so many truly great artists. Chekhov left behind a prodigious body of work that testified to both the depth and the prodigality of his talent. He once recalled that when he was beginning his literary career, writing came as easily as eating pancakes, and though he was also working full time as a doctor, he managed to write hundreds of short pieces of fiction. This not only had the practical effect of helping him to support his sprawling.

needy family, but it also made for a kind of intense literary apprenticeship that swiftly honed his writing skills. Indeed the asset of this new collection is that it shows just how the mature writer of such masterpieces as "Gooseberries" and "The Lady

English-language collection devoted exclusively to the work produced by Chekhov during his early and mid-20s, a period in which some nine-tenths of his published fiction was written. Though the selection made by Patrick Miles and Harvey Pitcher seems somewhat arbitrary at times — such notable early works as "The Letter," "Agafya," and "The Privy Councilor" are missing — they have done an admi-

Many of the earliest stories in this volume are really no more than quick offhand sketches - narrative equivalents of what courtroom artists produce with a few strokes of the pen. Others resemble the sort of casual reporting pieces one finds in the

New Yorker's Talk of the Town section. Though

Chekhov's keen reportorial eye is already in evidence, such stories as "The Death of a Civil Servant," "The Daughter of Albion" and "A Dreadful

And with "The Huntsman," published in 1885, and "The Witch," published in 1886, he seems to have discovered that short stories do not need sharp resolutions or tricked-up plots, that jokes, too, are unnecessary - there is more than enough comedy to be found in the tragic day-to-day lives of ordinary human be-

point of view of both the man and the woman.

Chekhov's characters all, in fact, have intimations that some form of beauty and meaning has eluded gives them a sense of incompleteness and loss. A murderer talks to his guards about the new life he will one day invent for himself in Siberia ful girl who, in a moment of mistaken identity, embraced him and gave him a glimpse of love ("The Kiss"), and a provincial girl declares her love for a young man, only to have him turn cold and depart from ber life forever ("Verochka"). Time has passed these characters by, and they realize that their dreams and ideals are irretrievable, that they exist now only in the past.

This is a theme, of course, that Chekhov would develop with consummate mastery in his later plays and fiction, but already in some of these early stories he has been to being it to fourtee.

With these two stories, Chekhov has also begun to let his characters speak for themselves, instead of willfully manipulating their actions. Certainly the degree of psychological complexity achieved in such later stories as "Man in a Shell" is still lacking, but Chekhov nonetheless shows a remarkable gift for delineating in just a few pages, his characters' state of mind. In "The Witch," the reader feels both the frustration of the subdeacon's wife, who is trapped in the provinces and married to a boor, and her husband's growing sense of impotence and resentment. champion Chris Evert Lloyd charged into the finals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships with "straight-set victories on Friday.

Navratilova climinated her doubles partner, Pam Shriver, 6-2, 6-1, and Evert, seeded No. 2, defeated Britain's Jo Durie, the No. 14 seed,

- Navratilova and Evert will meet in Saturday's championship match.
For their careers, Lloyd holds a 30-73 lead but Navratilova has won their last five confrontations, eight of the last nine and 11 of the last 14.

Navratilova needed only 55 minmes for the semifinal triumph, which avenged a stunning three-set upset that Shriver dealt her in the quarterfinals here a year ago. Lloyd needed about the same time to dispatch Durie.

In the first match of the day, John McEnroe and Peter Fleming won their third doubles title here, defeating Fritz Buchning and Van Winitsky, 6-3, 6-4, 6-2

Grand Prix Race for Dallas Approved

DALLAS (AP) — An official date of July 8, 1984, has been set and approved for the Dallas Grand Prix by the Federation Internationale du Sport Automobile, the organization that sanctions all Grand Prix races. Race officials in Dallas were notified Thursday that the FISA, meeting in Milan, had approved the race and the date. Soviet Basketball Tour Threatened

LEXINGTON, Kentucky (AP) - The University of Kentucky apparently will follow the lead of national amateur basketball officials in deciding whether to play a scheduled exhibition game against the Soviet Union. "We're just waiting to see what they're going to do rather than make a knee-jerk reaction," Cliff Hagan, Kentucky's athletics director,

The Nov. 22 game was one of seven arranged by the Amateur Basketball Association-USA. Questions about the exhibition series were raised after the shooting down of a South Korean airliner in Soviet airspace. Steelers' Bradshaw Out for 6 Games

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Terry Bradshaw, the Pittsburgh Steeler quarterback, said this week that he expects to miss up to half of the 1983 National Football League season because of his off-season elbow surgery. Bradshaw is eligible to come off the injured reserve list in three weeks, but has not thrown the ball hard during brief workouts and has practiced only a few days since the Steelers opened camp on July 8. "I won't be able to throw in four weeks," Bradshaw said. "I'm looking at about six to eight gles by Robin Yount and Cecil Cooper and a sacrifice fly by Ted

Cleveland Browns (0-I) at Detroit Lions (1-0):

Both teams' openers were indications of things to come. The Browns, who lost to Minnesota 27-21, have a stronger offense than defense; the Lions, who beat Tampa Bay, have a stronger defense than offense. Which makes this game a tough call. It could turn on Detroit's passing defense. Given time, Brian Sipe, who threw for 186 yards against the Vikings, can be as good as any quarterback in the league.

Green Bay's offense appears to field goals, but the only points the offense be more productive than Denver's, as was reaccounted for was a safety for Detroit, when the flected in the Packers' 41-38 overtime victory

What the Tide Brings In WASHINGTON — What brings the kids back, once they've left the nest? What makes them want to return home, after they have declared their independence? I wish I could say it was love of parents. I even wish I could say it was the dog or cat they left behind. I discovered what finally brings offspring back to their mommies

There isn't a child who hasn't gone out in the brave new world who eventually doesn't return to the old homestead carrying a bundle of dirty clothes.

"Of course, son. I'm mighty glad to see you. Would you like to say hello to your mother?"

"Tell her I'll see her when I come back to get my laundry."
"I'll do that. She was a little nervous about your being in the Amazon for two years." "Goodbye, Dad."

"Who was that downstairs?" "It was Ezra, Mother. He came

Inside China — Second Generation

Paul Pasqualini's Book Continues a Family Saga

By Vicky Elliott

onal Herald Tribuna PARIS — Paul Pasqualini
Came to Paris from Beijing in 1978, but his wife caught up with him only last year. She could have come earlier, but she was afraid because of what she'd read in the newspapers. She'd heard that in Europe, husbands sell their wives. But misconceptions are manufactured all over the world. Pasqualini remembers seeing French television documentaries on China when he first arrived and secing the pictures of a wealthy Shanghai party functionary with a washing machine, portrayed as if he were a bona fide worker. He knew, even though he couldn't understand the program fully, that they were getting it wrong.

Pasqualini came here with

French nationality and only a few words of French, but he has shed his speechless shyness and seems at home. "I wanted to write a book to show foreigners what normal life in China is like," he says today, the foreign words flowing easily. His wife is at his side, obviously disabused of some of her original prejudices, and his book is on the white tablecloth. Pasqualini wrote it with the help of a Chinese-speaking French diplomat who wrote under the name of Horace Hatamen, and with the help of his own prodi-gious memory. "You don't forget those things," he says. "They're burnt into you like linen branded with a hot iron." His book, "Son of Prisoner of Mao," (published in French earlier this year by Plon) is subtitled "New Tribulations of a Citizen of the People's Republic." It tells the Dickensian story of his fa-theriess family in the 1950s and '60s—how, when he was 11, he hauled back bricks from Beijing's wall to make a bed he could sleep in with his mother and younger brother; how one day, sickened by the endless meals of thin gruel, he poured ink into his meagre rations; how he learned to pick a pocket and was pleasantly surprised by the home comforts he found at the reform school he was Chinese in the poverty-ridden 1950s, as the government of Mao Zedong faltered under the Great Leap Forward. But Xiao Mao his Chinese name - was laboring under a special difficulty: his father Jean, son of a Corsican trader and his well-born Manchu wife, was arrested in 1956, just after the false spring of the Hun-dred Flowers, and spent eight years in prison as a counter-revointionary for his associations with Beijing's foreign community.

That story went on record in 1973, after Pasqualini semor had been released at the insistence of the French authorities and packed off on a steamer to Marseilles. His book about his prison life ("Prisoner of Mao") sold well in France and the United States and was later made into a film. It was too soft for the critics of Communist China, and too tepid for Western Maoists, but it had a fierce honesty about it that demanded respect.

Jean Pasqualini, fusing over his reunited family, recalls today how his son came to see him in prison in 1962, "wearing a pair of sandals much too big for him, a him; his brother had brought a packet of biscuits left over from Chinese New Year. "I promised myself that once I had the means, I'd pay them back a hundred-fold," he says. "In those days, I didn't know how I'd do it."

Growing up under the taint of his family origins, Paul managed to win a brief burst of fame by being the first in his neighbor-bood to post a dazibao or wall poster, at the outset of the Cultural Revolution. Anticipating his detractors, he posted a message that pointed out that though his father was French, Xiao Mao was Chinese, "After that, I was a little chief," he says. "I was young, and there was nothing in my head." But his suspect origins kept him from joining the Red Guards.

His stickiest moment came when an act of counter-revolutionary sabotage was detected at the book binding factory he was working in. One shipment of speeches had been defaced, by the application of two telltale stigma of hardened glue on the frontispiece portrait of Chairman tempting to flush it away in the communal toilets. Confession sessions of the entire work force followed, and the list of suspects was narrowed down to Pasqua-lini, who lived under the shadow of it for two years. It was only much later that he was told casually by a superior that the inci-dent had resulted from a mechanical error.

"China is all right as long as nothing is happening politically," young Pasqualini says today. People are very friendly until the political pressure starts, and then they begin to exaggerate things and try to make things as difficult as possible for you." The families of dubious origin go first. "We were outcasts, political pariahs," Jean says bitterly. "Every time one of my sons gets a bit dissatisfied," he continues, playing the patriarch, "I tell them, just a few years ago, you worked a hell of a lot more for a bell of a lot less." It was only when special representations were made by Raymond Berre, the French prime minister, on a visit to Beging in 1978, that Paul obtained the exit visa be had been trying to get since 1972. His brother, Antoine, followed three years later. Paul now teaches Chinese at the Ecole Polytechnique and has taken up work again as a plumber since the restaurant he ran with his brother closed this summer. He still seems surprised that tomatoes of the same quality cost different prices in different places, but he mows which Paris market gives the best value in Chinese cab-He has two more books to write, he says, one describing his experiences when he first arrived in France and the other a more ambitious saga starting with Imperial China and inspired by the history of his own family.
